THOUSANDS FACE FLOODS OVER MISSISSIPPI

Towns Are Isolated and Trains Are Detoured—Two Deaths Are Reported, But List of Dead May Be Larger.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 11.—With thousands of people homeless, a few towns almost isolated, many industrial plants closed, and several miles of railroad track under water, Mississippi faces a gradual resumption of normal life today following the floods which swept the southern and eastern part of the state Monday.

Only two lives have been lost so far, as the meager and belated reports show. These were in two wrecks from the Mississippi Central railroad, in which Engineer W. J. Trice and Fireman Henry Courney were killed. A negro was reported missing at Meridian, Miss., which is still almost isolated, and fear was expressed at Enterprise, Miss., which is partly under water, for the lives of E. B. Anderson, planter, and his family who are marooned.

Meridian and Hattiesburg were probably the heaviest sufferers, as 3,200 negroes in the two cities were driven from their homes and many washouts on railroad lines resulted from the flooding of the tracks by swollen streams.

In addition to the inundation in East Enterprise reaching a depth of seven feet and driving merchants to the second stories with goods, the S. P. Andrews large warehouse burned to the water's edge, other buildings caught fire and thousands of dollars worth of goods became rain-soaked. Many homes are reported there, but no loss of life, although several persons were rescued from floating houses. Laurel also lost heavily in buildings and live stock.

Basic City, near Enterprise, was also under water.

The railroads on which train service was completely stopped were the Southern and the Gulf & Ship Island. The Southern expects to get trains through Meridian before night. The Gulf & Ship Island marooned trains may remain out of service a few days.

The flood refugees were housed during the night in the courthouses, school houses and other public buildings. Relief parties in shifts were busy all night rescuing people from their homes which were flooded. Much suffering among the poorer classes was experienced and this was increased by the coldest weather that has been experienced here this winter.

The water of the river came to a stand early this morning and is expected to begin to recede during the day.

Property damage will be large, but cannot be ascertained until the flood subsides. It is estimated that the damage in Hattiesburg will reach $60,000, while the destruction of farm property and livestock in this section will be enormous.

The rescue work of the flood victims was conducted by Mayor Bateson and Sheriff Harbison. The refugees were brought in wagons to the courthouses, where they were fed last night by the Salvation Army.
